WILD CONDITION PREVAILS IN THE SOUTH OF CHINA

Some Provinces Declare Independence and Ally Themselves to Continue Republic, Others Proclaim Freedom.

(Associated Press Correspondent) Peking, April 26.—So much confusion reigns in south China that it is impossible to determine exactly what the status of many of the southern provinces is at this particular time. Yenan, Kwai-chow and Kwang-si provinces not only declared their independence of the Peking government, but allied themselves together in a movement to preserve the republic. Kwang-tung, Kwang-si and Chekiang have declared their independence, but have not allied themselves with the other three provinces. In other words, Kwang-tung, Chekiang and Kwang-si provinces have proclaimed themselves neutral. They are protecting themselves against both the government and the rebel troops, and their action seems to have been inspired more by a desire to preserve internal peace and prevent the disturbance of ordinary commercial transactions rather than to protest against the Peking government or show sympathy with the movement for a southern republic.

With Kwang-tung province, with the important city of Canton, declared its independence, the enemies of the Peking government felt that Yuan Shih-kai's fate was sealed. However, the revolutionary leaders in Kwang-tung are so unfriendly to each other and have had so many dissensions that Kwang-tung's secession seems to have little effect on the national situation.

On April 12, representatives of the warring political factions in Canton held a general meeting to discuss the situation. The leaders of the contending parties agreed so violently that revolvers were drawn and men outside the conference room fired rifles at the members. Tong Kook-tan and Wang Kwang-ting, the superintendent of police at Canton, were killed and Chu Chieh, leader of the progressive party, was seriously wounded. Robbers have been inspired by the unsettled conditions to engage in looting the northern districts of Kwang-tung, and the province has been compelled to issue a manifesto preventing both the government troops and the revolutionists from crossing its borders.

Somebody a long time ago labelled a lot of things "evil" and we have put most of the labels pretty faithfully. But most of the things they marked "evil" should have been placarded "foolishness."

People who exercise all the intelligence they have do nothing that is really evil.

And they have a fine time, with no big heads or next mornings or other popular brands of hangover.

Most of the time when we ask, "Is it right?" we could get the answer more suddenly if we said:

"Is it intelligent?"

Many things once labelled "evil" are not so.

We were brought up to believe that card-playing is evil, intrinsically.

Also dancing—go, whiz! Dancing was the worst thing there was!

Murder was a Sunday-school exercise compared with it.

If one plays cards when one should be and could be doing something helpful and necessary, it is wrong.

So would corn-hoeing or onion-weeding be, if you were neglecting something more important for it.

Ditto dancing.

Although we do believe it wrong for anybody to do it as badly as we do.

A dancing teacher told us so once.

This isn't all we know about evil.

But it's all we're going to tell here.

Evil

Evil is what the love of money is the root of.

The root is the lowest part, of course.

There is less unanimity of opinion as to what is the height of evil.

If everything else thrives as well under opposition as evil does, this would be a far different world.

Evil is also what men do that lives after them. If Bill Shakespeare is to be depended on,
